California High School List, 1907-1908

We publish this month the California High School list. Our readers will please remember that many of the schools have not yet opened; that many are very remote, and that changes are still likely to occur. We have made this list as complete and accurate as possible at this early date, with the means at our command. It should not necessarily be inferred that because a name is not given for certain subjects in a school, therefore the position is vacant; it may be that we have no data.

A copy of this list is being sent to every

High School principal in the state. We here request most earnestly that if any principal or other reader notices any inaccuracy in the list, he will kindly take the pains to sit down and write us a little note advising us of the matter; then we shall be glad to print these corrections in the October number of the NEWS, and the whole body of High School teachers throughout the state will profit by your individual care and thoughtfulness.

As in last year's list, an asterisk denotes that the teacher is new to the school.

COME AND SEE OUR NEW OFFICES IN SAN FRANCISCO, TO WHICH WE MOVE OUR BUSINESS IN SEPTEMBER.

We Ask You to Come to Us Because:

1. We have been in business in California seventeen years, and have a wide personal acquaintance among school officials and educators, who inform us of vacancies as they occur, and who give our candidates thoughtful consideration.

2. Our work is direct with employers, and not from "hearsay."

3. We know the field, the conditions that prevail in different schools and in different communities, and are able to adapt the teacher to the school.

4. Each year we locate hundreds of teachers, many of them in the most desirable positions in California. Very frequently we are able to offer a teacher exactly what he wants.

5. Our territory is not limited. We locate teachers in most of the Pacific States and Territories.

6. We have changed our contract somewhat, making exceedingly favorable terms to teachers.

7. One fee pays for enrollment in both the Los Angeles and San Francisco (temporarily, Berkeley) offices, and for a year's subscription to the Sierra Educational News.

8. Our new registration form is complete. If filled out with care, we shall know the teacher's qualifications and teaching experience in detail, and shall be able to represent him to the best advantage.

9. We are actively working our field, (1) By correspondence and circulars, (2) By a representative at County Teachers' Institutes. We constantly employ from eight to ten persons.

If you are a progressive, ambitious teacher, desiring advancement or a different location, we invite you to register with us. You will thus be enabled to keep in touch with suitable openings, one of which may prove your opportunity. You can register by mail, but a personal acquaintance is desirable; and teachers are cordially invited to visit our offices when in either city.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

CAUTION. There are so many inferior, low priced, so-called "Webster" dictionaries now offered for sale that exceeding care should be taken to look for the CIRCULAR TRADE-MARK on the front cover and OUR NAME on the title-page.

The International is the HIGHEST AUTHORITY FOR THE SCHOOLS.

Of no other dictionary can the following be said: That all of the 45 State Superintendents of Schools are a unit in their indorsement; That the schoolbook publishers adhere to it as their standard; That College Presidents, State Normal School Principals, County and City Superintendents and educators without number commend and praise it; That in every instance where State purchases have been made for the supply of public schools, the genuine Webster has been selected.

A Library in One Book.

Besides an accurate, practical, and scholarly vocabulary of English, enlarged with 25,000 NEW WORDS, the International contains a History of the English Language, Guide to Pronunciation, Dictionary of Fiction, New Gazetteer of the World, New Biographical Dictionary, Vocabulary of Scripture Names, Greek and Latin Names, English Christian Names, Foreign Quotations, Abbreviations, Metric System, State Seals, Flags of All Nations.

2380 Pages. 5000 Illustrations.

PRES. ELIOT OF HARVARD fittingly says:
"The International is a wonderfully compact storehouse of accurate information."

SHOULD YOU NOT OWN SUCH A BOOK in order to answer quickly and with final authority the many questions arising daily concerning new words, spelling, pronunciation, definition, etymology, synonyms, etc.?

WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY.
The largest of our abridgments. Regular and Thin Paper Editions. Unsurpassed for elegance and convenience.
1116 PAGES AND 1460 ILLUSTRATIONS.

F. W. Prince

Frederick William Prince's lecture on the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, with some mention of the Cliff Dwellings and Petrified Forest in Arizona, is exceedingly popular this season. He has already been booked for a number of dates before large organizations.

The subject matter of this lecture has been carefully prepared, and with the beautiful and correctly colored lantern slides, panoramic and life motion pictures used, make it an ideal lecture for the Teachers' Institute, or any institute or organization seeking an attraction, which combines in a happy manner both educational and entertainment features.

For full particulars address, F. W. Prince, 673 Market St., San Francisco.

Pointers for County Superintendents and Principals

In our August number we spoke of the music work of Mrs. Sweezy and promised more. She has inaugurated some new things in this state. As a result of her Institute work, a group of mountain districts united to hire a competent supervisor of music. This girl had to swim flooded streams during the storms to keep her appointments, but she got there and gave the lessons. In her Institute work, Mrs. Sweezy shows a course of study that can be taken up by these united districts. They have been tried and are successful.

Many of our readers may not know that at least one High School is emulating the best private schools in presenting "advantages." The Whittier Union High School not only employs a supervisor of music, who supervises the work in the grades and in all of the districts composing the Union High School District, but gives space to a teacher of piano instruction.
They have an orchestra, etc. Music is given credit toward graduation. Why not? The High School must for many children be the limit of scholastic work. The Whittier High School is not polytechnic in title, but it has afforded instruction in music, athletics, manual training, oratory and drawing, aside from the ordinary courses for preparation for the University. It comes nearer realizing the truth of the stock term, "People's College," than almost any other institution in the state. It may not have proved entirely satisfactory (we have no recent details) but some such plan ought to succeed.

If you can't try the whole scheme, try music anyway, and have Mrs. Sweezy explain to your teachers how it can be done.

SUPERINTENDENT COOPER OF SE- ATTLE ON TEACHERS' AGENCIES

The writer is frequently asked for his opinion of teachers' agencies, whether reputable teachers enrolled in them, and what is of much more interest to the teacher, whether school boards recognize their value and patronize them. I answer, yes, assuredly, to both questions. Good teachers, some of the best in the land, make use of the agency to put themselves in communication with employers of whom they could not know without the aid of the agency, whose business it is to ascertain where vacancies exist, what kind of talent is required, and what remuneration will be paid. School boards and superintendents recognize that it is the business of agencies to enroll good teachers, and that a wide-awake agency is always on the alert for the discovery of teachers for whom it will be easy to secure employment because of their preparation and ability. There are, however, two kinds of teachers' agencies. One kind conducts its Say you saw it in the Sierra Educational News.

business upon a basis such as to promote the confidence of both teachers and employers, the other kind pursues methods that are ruinous to its own interests ultimately, and assassinates the faith of teacher and school board in such instrumentalities. The former knows where vacancies exist and has been invited or encouraged to nominate candidates, and in nominating uses discrimination both as to the number and quality of those named for places. Such agencies communicate with the employers and furnish them with as full information as they can of the candidates, and put the candidates in communication with the employer. The latter often merely surmise that vacancies will occur, and recommend teachers on their lists to apply, and never communicate with the employers at all.

There are a number of really honorable and well-conducted agencies in the country, both East and West, and there are a few, too many, of the other kind. It is to be hoped that the latter will ruin their own business, as they surely will, before they too seriously damage the agency business.—
"American Journal of Education."

Chapters From the History of California

J. D. SWEENEY,

FOURTH PAPER—Continued from June number

The actual beginning of California history is the founding of the first settlement rather than the discovery, just as the history of the United States opens with Jamestown and Plymouth rather than with San Salvador. For many years Russia had been slowly moving down the Pacific Coast from Alaska, and Spain and Mexico spent many anxious moments about the steady onward movement of the sealers from the North. Already some had reached the limits of California, and unless Spain wished that coast to fall into the hands of another, it was of utmost importance that she occupy the land. So it can be seen that the settling of the new territory was a political move rather than a religious one, as is generally accepted. The church was selected to take an active part in the settlement, as that part of the work would be done without cost

After much preparation, four divisions started from Mexico City early in 1769. to the State, which at this time was not over-prosperous.

Two were by land and two by sea. San Diego and Monterey were the objective points of these undertakings. Gaspar De Portala had charge of the civil department and was to be Governor of the new province, and the religious work was under the supervision of the famous Father Serra.

The second water division on the "San Antonio" reached San Diego on April 11. The "San Carlos" arrived on the 29th of the same month; the first land party came in on May 1, and Portala and Serra did not arrive until July 1. Thus two hundred and twenty-seven years after its discovery did San Diego become the first permanent settlement in our California.

The voyages and overland trips were not all holiday pastime. Nearly all of the crew of the San Carlos were taken with scurvy on the way up and all died except the cook and one sailor. She was about sixty-five days longer making port than was the San Antonio. The sore on Father Serra's foot became so bad that his men were almost forced to carry him on a litter, but the old Stoic refused. The march, however, was slow and wearisome.

The 16th of July was chosen as the day upon which the cross was raised, as that was the anniversary of the great victory over the followers of the Crescent in 1212. Accordingly, when that day came, the first mission was established by appropriate ceremonies. The natives looked on in stolid indifference. In fact, there was but little progress toward conversion at the San Diego mission, a year passing before the first convert was made. This was not the experience of any other mission in the State.

The story was related that a lad about fifteen became very friendly with Father Serra, who taught him some Spanish. This boy was urged to bring some child for baptism, and at last a father came forward bringing a child, after being promised a suit of soldier's clothes, to which he had taken a fancy. Great preparations were made, and one of the officers was to act as godfather. Just as the priest raised his hand to place the water upon the babe's head, the father, with a whoop, seized his son and was off with a bound, not forgetting to take the suit.

This incident always brought the tears to the eyes of Father Serra whenever told, as he ever attributed the loss of the child's soul to some sin of his own.

The San Diego natives readily accepted any clothing offered, but for a long time feared the food of the whites. This latter was a blessing, for if the natives had been as eager for food as they were for other articles, the friars and their followers would have been soon starved out. As it was, every available article of clothing was stolen, and even the San Carlos was boarded for plunder. This necessitated leaving a guard upon the vessel and weakening the force on shore. The natives became more insolent than ever after this, and in August made an attack upon the whites. The natives were repulsed, one Spaniard being slain.

But long ere this, July 14, 1769, even before the founding of the San Diego mission, Portala had set out with about sixty men to locate at Monterey. Strange as it may seem, they were not able to recognize in summer the bay visited by Viscaino so many winters before. Portala went on to the north probably as far as San Francisco (some of the soldiers reported having seen a vast inland sea) and then returned. A cross was set up on the north and another upon the south side of the Peninsula of Pines stating that they had been unable to locate Monterey. The expedition reached San Diego in January.

Portala, utterly discouraged, advised immediate return to Mexico, as their store of supplies was about exhausted, and the "San Antonio", long overdue, had not been heard from. Father Serra, loath to depart, endeavored to overcome this. But at last he promised that if relief did not come within nine days he would consent to abandon the mission. Day after day was spent in prayer and at last the day to leave was at hand. All were astir preparing for the departure on the morrow, when in came the "San Antonio" from the north, having missed the port. Joy filled the heart of the good president, and for many years he celebrated the day with special services.

Thus did the first settlement narrowly escape being a failure. Had it been so, there is no doubt but that the history of California would have been different. Probably the Russians from the north would have secured the coast, or more probably, it would have fallen into the hands of England.

Serra believed that the bay described by Portala was none other than that of Monterey, and through his influence a land and a sea expedition were sent to the north early in April of 1770. The "San Antonio" reached the harbor on May 31, and on June 3 Fathers Serra and Crespi arrived. They had no difficulty in recognizing the bay as that visited by Viscaino. On the 3d of June a bell was hung in the branches of an oak, a cross was erected, the royal standard was unfurled and a mass sung, probably upon the same spot where Viscaino had offered the same in 1603. This mission was called San Carlos Borromeo.

For six years this was the most northern settlement. Shortly after the founding of Monterey, Father Serra, to remove the native neophytes from the corrupting influence of the Spanish soldiery, went across the narrow peninsula and established his mission at the mouth of the Carmel river. There the capital mission still stands.

The news of the successful founding at Monterey was hailed with great rejoicing at Mexico. A solemn thanksgiving was celebrated, as it was felt that now the new territory was in the hands of the Spanish.

In July, 1771, San Antonio de Padua was founded. Four years later this station was raided by the Indians, but withstood the attack. Today it stands solitary and deserted.

Two months after the foundation of San Antonio, San Gabriel Archangel was dedicated. The next year San Luis Obispo was established; then came a period of inactivity for four years. During this period Father Serra visited Mexico to secure the separation of the missions of old California from those of New. This he succeeded in doing, and also secured many privileges for the work he was doing in the new field. Soon after his return to Monterey the founding of San Juan Capistrano was decided upon. Before the actual settlement was effected news was received from San Diego that upon the night of November 4 (1775) about 800 Indians had made an attack upon the whites, the entire number of whom was two priests, two carpenters, four soldiers and one blacksmith.

Father Jayme was awakened by the noise and flames and, thinking that an accident had occurred, rushed out, to meet a group of natives. He saluted them as usual, when they fell upon him, and in the morning his bruised body was found near by, naked, and pierced by eighteen arrows.

Another band assailed the hut wherein were one of the carpenters and the blacksmith; the latter sallied forth and was slain. The other carpenter was upon a sick bed and unable to defend himself. He, too, was killed. Two of the soldiers were wounded, but so gallant was the defense of those left that they were able to hold out until day, when the Indians, fearing that aid might come to the Spanish, retired.

A Day and A Night

EMMA YOUNGLOVE

"Even you wouldn't care to undertake that, Miss Hastings."

"Wouldn't I, Paul?"

The youth spoke respectfully, yet with a suggestion of challenge. The woman's tone was alert, even eagerly interested, but ignored the challenge. Her voice had a softness characteristic of the South, but it was destitute of languor and it had an elasticity and freedom, a joy and spontaneity which the South does not give. She was a Western woman, a "native daughter of the Golden West."

The midwinter morning was clear and enticing. Miss Hastings had been strolling about the court yard of the hotel, and three new-made friends had gathered to her side. While they stood looking at "Pat," the sheepshead, swimming round his tank of marble and glass, Dr. Morrill exclaimed, "What a glorious morning this would be to walk across the island!"

"Indeed it would," replied Miss Hastings. "You will never find a better, Doctor." It was Mr. Guiberson who spoke. He had been upon the island so frequently and had spent so much time there that he was inclined to address the other with a little of the patronizing air that the Californian naturally assumes toward the "tenderfoot" from the East.

"Let us make up a party at once," the Doctor suggested. "Will you go, Miss Hastings?"

"I should be delighted!" she exclaimed.

"You would better go alone today, Doctor, and search out the easiest trail," said Mr. Guiberson.

"How far is it across the island?" questioned the Doctor.

"About ten miles at this place, though it is narrow at the neck."

It was then that Paul interposed his challenge. But the Doctor, perceiving the woman's interest, repeated his invitation, "What do you say, Miss Hastings? Shall we try it?"

"Yes," and she started off immediately. "I will go to prepare the lunch."

"That is no easy excursion, suitable for a woman," protested Mr. Guiberson. "Miss Hastings cannot perform such a feat as that."

"Miss Hastings is a brick!" exclaimed Paul. "She can do anything anybody can!"

Fifteen minutes later Miss Hastings appeared, lunch-box in hand. In that brief time she had arrayed herself in a brown outing suit not a whit less adapted to her undertaking than was the more primitive garb of Diana herself. The short skirt of heavy material was edged with a band of leather. Cap, jacket, and leggings of the same material and trimming gave a jaunty appearance. She was taller than most of her sex, but hardly seemed so when dressed for her climb. Her figure was well rounded, but the abundant flesh was firm and hard, the muscles as tense and finely trained as a grayhound's. Her hands were small and her ankles slender. Her limbs were as supple as those of a deer. Her heavy brown hair, drawn back from her face, showed wilfulness in choosing its own folds, and one or two loosened ends fell in straight wisps forward of the line of her hair. Her hazel eyes shone with the joy of anticipation.

When she approached, Dr. Morrill rose and went to meet her. Every movement of his evidenced the man trained in the usages of society and accustomed to obey the conventions of the drawing-room. He was tall and powerfully built, and looked equal to any test of strength or endurance.

As the two walked across the pebbly stretch before beginning the ascent, the easy gait and the buoyant step of each were noted by the group of friends who had gathered to see them start. It was apparent that they were in perfect harmony with the morning, that their spirits were as free and light as the air. Both had an abounding physical vigor and were thrilled with delight in action.

Dr. Morrill was an Eastern man, unaccustomed to the sage-brush and cactus of the desert, of which every sprig was familiar to his companion. When he plucked a homely flower and asked her to name it, she gave him the life history of the modest ice-plant, illustrating as far as possible from examples growing within reach. She told him that a few sheep were herded upon a neighboring island, though it was destitute of water, and that the secret lay in the presence of this little plant, whose succulent leaves afforded a substitute. So he, too, began to love the wild things that brighten arid places.

Neither of them needed any tutoring to appreciate the magnificent view when they reached the summit. Ocean and mainland and islands lay before them, softened in the distance by the haze which mercifully dimmed the brilliancy of the midday. Words seemed an intrusion upon the grandeur of the scene, and they stood long in silence, solemnized by Nature in one of her nobler moods. Then, still silent, they began the descent of the further slope.

They had not proceeded far down the western side before it became apparent that this was steeper than the other, and the Doctor raised the question, "Would we not better abandon our intention and retrace our steps?"

"By no means," lightly replied his companion. "I promised Miss Hoyle that I would bring her a pebble from the further shore, and I always keep my word."

At times the way was difficult; once or twice it seemed almost impossible. But the two were well matched in strength and courage, and they continued until they were just above the line of the spray cast up by the waves breaking on the rocks. Then they sat down and watched the turbulent waters. Both abandoned themselves to the exhilarating influences of Nature. They could not talk much; the booming of the waves prevented. The wind had risen as the day progressed, and the sea was beating upon the rugged shore with powerful assaults. Off shore the waves were magnificent. Almost every one was foam-topped. Such variety! Some broke with a kittenish motion which sent the foam forward like an animal at play—a slight familiar where waves break on gentler shores. Some billows had but a little white wreath to crown them. Others tumbled over in great seething masses. Occasionally one shot out tongues of fine mist. Some waves seemed built up of many smaller ones, each retaining somewhat of its individuality, enough, at least, to be clearly marked. The whole surface of some was snowy. Now and then came a huge mass of water, moving majestically through the paths of the deep, and visible for considerable distances among the other billows.

After their lunch, in spite of the Doctor's laughing protest that they might want the remnants before they reached the hotel, Miss Hastings tossed the fragments to the sea gulls which floated on quiet wings above and around them. Often the birds were but a few feet away, and the shadings of their plumage were distinctly visible. The white lining of their outspread wings seemed to reflect the semi-transparency as well as the delicate sea-green color with which the waves broke in the afternoon sunshine.

At mid-afternoon the friends reluctantly began the ascent. Almost immediately it became evident that the climb on the western side of the island was a more serious undertaking than either had anticipated. The woman was quicker than the man, and soon had the start, when he called, "Not too fast!" It was unnecessary, for at that instant she realized that the rock before her was a barrier. She sought a way by it on either side. In vain. Again she struggled to scale its front. Again she failed. By this time the Doctor reached her side with a smiling comment upon the "hare and the tortoise." But the way was impassable, even with his aid. Then she stepped aside to allow the Doctor to ascend it first. But he, too, failed.

"There is nothing to do but to go back and try a new route," he said gently, with all the cheerfulness he could muster.

"Yes," she answered undauntedly, and began the descent.

At a point a little above the ledge where they had been seated, she turned sharply to the right and, after threading her way for two or three rods along a horizontal ledge, whose narrow breadth for a third of the way was bordered by a precipice which fell fifty feet sheer to the water's edge, she turned upward without hesitation and renewed the ascent. This time she avoided leaving much distance between herself and her companion. When they had gained a point a little higher than the rock which had before blocked their progress, another stood in their way, equally unsurmountable and unavoidable. With no sign of annoyance or discouragement she again turned and made her way back.

"Sit down and rest here," said the Doctor, "while I prospect a little."

As soon as he was gone, however, she also started to trace a new path. The Doctor perceived that her eyes were better trained to search out mountain trails than were his own, and that her energy was exhaustless and her courage unflinching. Yet the hours passed and the sun sank low, and they had made no substantial progress in their attempt. Then they gave it up for the night, well knowing that it would be mad folly to continue their efforts after the fall of evening. The danger of hopelessly losing their way would be increased many fold, while it would be reckless in the extreme to climb over precipitous cliffs in the uncertain light of the moon.

They sat upon the rocks and rested for a few minutes. The man rallied his friend upon her generosity in giving their supper to the birds. Presently Miss Hastings said, "Do you see the sumach coppice yonder? Wouldn't you like to bring a supply of twigs and wood so that we may have a fire?"

The Doctor smiled at the fertility of her resources and bowed assent to the suggestion.

"If you will give me the folding cups and your knife, I will see if I can find something for supper.

"No man could do less than render cordial assent to such a request."

The Doctor made haste to build a huge pile of wood; and, if it was light and poor, yet there was every variety of size from the leaf rib to sticks as big as a man's wrist, and some was dry and some broken fresh from the growing shrubs.

After a prolonged absence, Miss Hastings returned from her quest along the rocks near the water's edge. The Doctor inquired eagerly as to her success, but she made evasive answers, which caused apprehension on his part that her efforts had been in vain. However, she selected a quiet recess among the rocks, which she straightway dubbed her "kitchen," and to which, she ly. "My favorite amusement, when I was a little girl, was to 'play house,'" she said. "I liked best of all the tiny hollows between the great roots of spreading oak-trees.
